

Thai massage, also known as Thai yoga massage, is a type of bodywork that originated in Thailand. It is a unique and ancient healing art that involves the use of hands, feet, and body to apply pressure, stretch, and manipulate the muscles and joints of the body.

Thai massage is typically performed on a mat on the floor, and the client is fully clothed in loose, comfortable clothing. The practitioner uses their hands, forearms, elbows, feet, and knees to apply pressure to specific points on the body, as well as to gently stretch and manipulate the muscles.

Thai massage is often described as a combination of acupressure, assisted yoga poses, and deep tissue massage. The practitioner uses their body weight and leverage to apply pressure and stretch the client's body in a way that helps to release tension, increase flexibility, and promote relaxation.
